VIEW FROM THE CHAIR: CALLING FUTURE NURSE EDUCATORS—GRADUATE PROGRAMS AT MESSIAH!

THIS IS AN INCREDIBLY EXCITING TIME in the history of our nursing program as we launch our first graduate programs in July 2013. Recognizing that nursing education is one of our strengths, our first Master of Science in nursing track will focus on preparing academic and/or staff development educators. National surveys of educational programs indicate that there is still a tremendous faculty shortage. Recently collected nationwide data from 742 baccalaureate and higher degree programs by the American Association of Colleges of Nursing (AACN) show that all undergraduate and graduate nursing programs have grown in enrollment, but over 58,000 qualified applications in generic baccalaureate nursing programs were not accepted. One of the primary reasons reported for denying applications was insufficient faculty.¹ Our regional surveys indicate that there is interest among prospective RN students who wish to develop a career in nursing education, and there is interest among our regional clinical partners in hiring well-qualified staff development educators.

Today's graduate student seeks affordability and accessibility when choosing a nursing program of study, and our competitive pricing and online format meets both of these needs. Additionally, those well-qualified students who sought their initial education in associate degree programs have an RN-MSN option if they wish to have the value added to their credentials of a Master of Science in nursing degree. Further, those who already hold a graduate degree as an advanced practice nurse who wish to enhance or shift their careers may seek a 15-credit Certificate in Advanced Graduate Studies in nursing education. After meeting the practice requirement, all graduates will be eligible to take the National League for Nursing Certified Nurse Educator examination.

Each of us has an ethical and professional duty to support the education of the future generation of nurses. We can fulfill that duty in many ways—volunteering to precept students, encouraging our colleagues to pursue graduate preparation to teach or pursuing our own education and scholarship to serve as role models for the advancement of nursing practice and education. But for those who have a passion and a call for teaching, scholarship and service in academia or staff development, this program may be for you. For more information, please visit this website: www.messiah.edu/msn.

INTERNATIONAL PRESENTATION

By Nancy Woods, Ph.D., MPH, CNM, associate professor of nursing

ON DEC. 2-4, 2012, the First International Congress of Gynecology and Obstetrics was held at the Guangzhou Baiyun International Convention Center in Guangzhou, China. More than 100 world-renowned experts from more than 20 countries presented cutting-edge research findings addressing the conference theme of "New Horizons in Women's Health." Dr. Nancy Woods, Ph.D., MPH, R.N. from the Messiah College Department of Nursing was one of the invited speakers. She presented her research, "A cross-sectional analysis of the effect of patient controlled epidural analgesia vs. patient controlled analgesia on post-caesarean pain and breastfeeding," which was recently published in the Journal of Obstetric, Gynecologic, and Women's Health. Although qualitative research supports women's perception of the effect of C-section on breastfeeding, this study is one of the first to quantify the impact of post-caesarean pain on the initiation and frequency of breastfeeding. This large (N = 621), retrospective, comparative, correlational study was conducted with a team of nurses and physicians at a community teaching hospital in the northeast United States. Findings from the study resulted in substantial practice change at the study site leading to improved pain management along with earlier and more frequent breastfeeding in the first 24 hours after delivery. Following the conference, Nancy and her husband John, had some time to explore the beautiful sites and culture of China.

MESSIAH COLLEGE SAYS FAREWELL TO M'LISS HALSEY

M'LISS STARTED WORKING AT MESSIAH IN 1994. She was a clinical instructor for the maternity course in the fall semester and taught one or two semesters for the degree path program. Somewhere “along the way” she began teaching Nursing 210 and 211 courses in the spring.

M'Liss has an undergraduate degree in psychology, and worked as a social worker for several years before deciding to go back to school for nursing. She has a M.S. in nursing from Pace University in New York, where she also completed a family nurse practitioner preceptorship. M'Liss graduated from Pace in 1981 and started working as a staff nurse in labor and delivery at Harrisburg Hospital. In 1988, she left the hospital and worked as a nurse practitioner until 1999 when she returned to labor and delivery.

M'Liss is married and has two grown children. Her son works in human services and lives in West Chester, Pa., and her daughter is a social worker who lives in Philadelphia—she is currently in graduate school for public health.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MARTI DERR, PAMELA LINSTEDT AND DEBRA LOOP!

These faculty members became Certified Nurse Educators by passing the National League for Nursing, Certified Nurse Educator Exam in summer 2012. Their credentials now include this designation, shown by the letters CNE behind their names. Certification as a nurse educator is a mark of distinction for nurse educators who demonstrate expertise in the specialty role of nursing education. Specifically, the mission of the Academic Nurse Educator Certification Program is to recognize excellence in the advanced specialty role of the academic nurse educator.

MESSIAH NURSING STUDENT AWARDED FUTURE OF HEALTHCARE AWARD

ON APRIL 5, 2013, NICOLE HESS, A SENIOR NURSING STUDENT, was awarded the Future of Healthcare Award at Central Penn Parent's sixth annual Healthcare Heroes awards program and celebratory breakfast at the Sheraton Harrisburg-Hershey. The Future of Healthcare Award is presented to a young adult under the age of 22 who demonstrates a dedication to health care, professional behavior and service to our local communities. Jeff Stroup, clinical adjunct instructor at Messiah College nominated Nicole because of her commitment to her faith, friends and most of all to the field of nursing. "Nicole has the natural ability to serve others and make a difference in the lives of people around her; she is deserving of this award. I was honored to have the opportunity to nominate Nicole."

Nicole's most influential role model is her grandmother, Susie Hess. Nicole writes, "She loves people in such a tangible and passionate way and that is how I want to not only love people, but how I want to love and serve my future patients as a nurse. She is the most selfless, hardworking and loving individual that I have ever had the privilege to know." What Nicole likes best about her career path and role in Central Pennsylvania's health care industry, she replied, "Being only a nursing student, I have not yet tasted the working world in Central Pennsylvania's health care industry. However, I am excited to do so. I am excited for the opportunity to work with and serve patients in the hospital setting and the community as a nurse. I appreciate the nursing profession because it involves side-by-side interaction with the patients. I am passionate about serving patients, learning from them and using my nursing education to offer them the best holistic nursing care that I can."

"The faculty and I are extremely proud of Nicole's selection for this honor, as she is very deserving of this recognition," according to the Department of Nursing Chairperson, Dr. Carolyn Kreamer.

Nominations were limited to individuals and organizations in the Central Pennsylvania counties of Adams, Dauphin, Cumberland, Perry, Lancaster, York and Lebanon. Many other categories of honor were awarded to health care professionals and organizations. Every finalist and winner will be featured in a supplement to the May 2013 issue of Central Penn Parent magazine.

DISSERTATION RESEARCH

Dr. Heidi Lutz, associate professor of Nursing, presented her dissertation research at the International Society of Psychiatric and Mental Health Nurses (ISPN) 15th Annual Conference held in San Antonio, Texas on April 19, 2013. Her presentation was entitled,

"What Advance Practice Nurses Need to Know about Families Coping with Autism." Co-presenters were nursing faculty from Widener University who served on her dissertation committee, Barbara Patterson, Ph.D., R.N., ANEP, and Jean Klein, Ph.D., R.N.

My journey at Messiah College

By Nicole Hess '13

WORKING THROUGH THE NURSING PROGRAM over the past four years has been an adventure. Coming to Messiah, I was set on being a nursing student while also playing on the women's basketball team. It provided different challenges, from late nights traveling home from away games, to missing practices for clinical experiences, to attempting to find a way to be devoted to both. Balance was the key. Knowing that at times I would not be able to give 100 percent in both areas simultaneously, I focused on giving what I had at practice and then switched gears and focused on my schoolwork once I stepped off the court.

Nursing has always come first however, and that distinction was an important one for me to make early on. It was also important for me to make time to be with my friends and relax, and thankfully I have been able to do that. There were days when it was tough to stay on top of my studies and basketball, but I always told myself that no one forced me into this situation; I chose it. I liked the challenge and concentrated on one day at a time.

Other days, I think the good Lord gave me a little extra strength and determination to just keep pushing through. Looking back, another thing that helped me manage both basketball and nursing were the relationships that I formed with my teammates and my classmates. I feel privileged to have gotten the chance to build friendships with so many wonderful people. They helped keep me smiling and laughing.

I have wanted to be a nurse for as long as I can remember, and the thought of another option has never really crossed my mind. My hope is that after a few years of working as an R.N., I will serve overseas with a medical mission organization or look into Mercy Ships. I've always had a special place in my heart for Africa and after serving there two summers ago I knew I'd return, Lord willing. The world of nursing is an exciting one and I am so thankful that I am able to be a part of it. I'm also thankful for the professors, clinical instructors, coaches, friends and family that have helped me make it possible to succeed in nursing school and basketball. I've learned and experienced so much over the past four years and I certainly could not have done it alone. It's been a rewarding adventure; may the adventure continue.

Opportunities in nursing

By Daniel Mauger '14

I WAS DRIVING TO WORK FOR MY NIGHT SHIFT and I saw a familiar sight: glaring yellow hazard lights flashing from a car sitting on the side of the highway. I wondered if the driver needed help, and I was torn as to whether to stop or not. I had to make a decision fast, and as I sped past the car I justified myself, “He doesn't look like he needs help, and besides, I need to get to work.” Had I missed an opportunity?

I arrived at the hospital and was assigned to sit one-on-one with James,* in the Intermediate Care Unit. He had been admitted for pneumonia, but also suffered from dementia, which is why I was assigned to be with him. When I walked into his room, my ear drums were beset by subtle but incessant sounds. The tube carrying oxygen to his nose constantly whispered while the monitor tracking his blood pressure and respiratory rate binged and bleeped. Added to this were James' intermittent incoherent mutterings and his raspy cough.

I settled myself into a chair for what I expected to be an eternally long night as the music channel on the TV played old tunes that James occasionally recognized.

Daniel Mauger, junior nursing student

For a while I tried talking to James, but our conversation seemed to be like a bridge built simultaneously from both banks of a river that fails to meet in the middle. From scraping together bits and pieces I learned that James came from a Catholic background, and I considered talking to him about spirituality or perhaps praying with him. Feeling rather awkward, however, I decided against it.

After a while calm settled in and James drifted off to sleep. I sat with him through the watches of the night and as the sun began to come up, the bustle of the hospital increased. The resident doctor came to see how James was faring and noticed he was less responsive than the day before. I was half listening to the resident and half thinking about what I was going to do when I got off my shift in five minutes when suddenly an alert began to sound from the heart monitor. The signals were transmitted to the nurse's station and a troop of nurses took the room by storm.

Someone called out, "He's in A-fib and V-tach; check his pulse!"

"I don't feel anything!"

"He's not breathing anymore!"

"We can't get the code cart because he's a DNR!"

I had only completed my sophomore year of nursing, so I didn't comprehend everything that was being said. However I did understand that James was dying and his family had requested that in such a situation he should not be resuscitated.

An atmosphere of seriousness and urgency filled the room, but there was no rushing around like in a classic emergency TV show. A nurse held James' hands and gently reassured him that she was there. James never seemed to be in pain or discomfort, rather he just slipped out of this world.

At some point during the ordeal I had begun to pray silently. I pleaded with God to preserve this man's life, to perform a miracle. Emotions washed over me: surprise, fear, excitement, anxiety, amazement, sadness. I didn't know what to think as I slowly shifted around the room feeling like an outsider looking in through a window into

"Had I just spent all night with [James] without ever sharing any of the hope for eternity that I have? Had I missed an opportunity?"

someone else's world. Had I just witnessed a patient die? I thought back to my reluctance to discuss spirituality with James, and it was troubling. Had I just spent all night with him without ever sharing any of the hope for eternity that I have? Had I missed an opportunity?

I was woken out of these thoughts as one of the nurses suddenly said, "I feel a pulse!" James had gone about a minute with his monitors glaring nothing but flat lines, but suddenly, without any intervention, he was back. The shocked nurses watched as he came back to his baseline levels, which were not good, but certainly much better than nothing! As James resumed a semi-stable condition, the staff slipped out of the room and I was left with the one nurse in charge of James.

"What exactly just happened?" I asked.

"Well James went into V-tach and A-fib and lost his pulse. But then spontaneously his heart started again. I've never seen anything like it!"

The nurse had stated the obvious, but the last part of his sentence surprised me. Had I witnessed a miracle?

As I thought about all that had just occurred, my shift ended and I handed my one-on-one responsibilities off to my replacement. As I was driving home, my head was again filled with thoughts. The nurse had said that despite his marvelous recovery James would most likely pass away that morning. I mulled over the whole situation over and over again, and was bothered by my failure to take an opportunity to discuss spirituality with James. Suddenly I was roused from my daydreaming by a familiar sight: flashing hazard lights on the side of the road. A car had its hood up, so something was obviously the matter. I wondered if the driver needed help... This time I knew what to do. I had learned from my experience with James not to miss opportunities. I promptly pulled over and got out to see what the problem was.

Epilogue

It turns out that James lived about a week longer. Although I never was assigned to him again, I followed up on his condition as best as I could by looking at his chart. Several days before he actually passed away I went to his room and found his daughter and wife by his bedside. I introduced myself and told them a little about my experience of sitting with him. Guessing that they were Catholics from my assessment of James, I asked if I could pray with them. They accepted, and we bowed our heads. I had learned not to miss any opportunity to share the hope I have from knowing Christ.

NEWS FROM THE STUDENT NURSES' ASSOCIATION

THE MESSIAH COLLEGE STUDENT NURSES' ASSOCIATION (SNA) experienced another active 2012-13 academic year. The chapter is led by president, Morgan Hartz and faculty advisor, Louann Zinsmeister. In the fall, 11 students attended the Pennsylvania State Student Nurses' (SNAP) Association Convention in Pittsburgh, Pa. and five of these students represented Messiah as delegates in the SNAP Senate. In the spring, 18 students attended the National Student Nurses Association Convention in Charlotte, N.C. Both conventions afforded members many opportunities for professional development, for participation in business meetings of the organization, and for opportunities to meet with nursing students from across Pennsylvania and the United States. Biweekly meetings were held on campus for students to hear local nurse leaders present topics of interest to the local chapter members. The chapter sponsored a clothing drive, a Zumba session and 12 NCLEX review sessions from October to March. These NCLEX review sessions were presented by Dr. Zinsmeister and were offered free of charge to all SNA members interested in getting a head start on preparing for the NCLEX examination. In addition, the chapter was awarded a Silver Membership Award from the Pennsylvania State Student Nurses' Association for their active membership of 45 nursing students. The Messiah College Student Nurses' Association is a chapter of both the National Student Nurses Association (NSNA) and the Pennsylvania State Student Nurses' Association (PSSNA). Membership is open to all nursing majors at Messiah College. The following students served as the 2012-2013 board members: Morgan Hartz, president; Andi Matter, vice president; Ashley Conwell, treasurer; Rebekah Espiritu, secretary; Jen Ranck and Liz D'Amelio, fundraising; and Katherine Crawford, Publicity.
