Why study Religion?

To reflect on ethical and moral values.

To recognize the many ways religion can be studied: historically, sociologically, and more.

To encounter racial, ethnic, cultural, religious, and national diversity.

To realize the complex relationship between religion and culture locally, nationally, and globally.

To learn how religions shape individual identity and self-understanding.

Resources

The Case for Religious Studies
The Five Major World Religions
PEW Religious Landscape Study