One of the things that characterizes the type of rigorous education we offer in the College Honors Program is that we don’t avoid or sidestep disputed questions. Rather, we face them honestly, discussing them together in an informed, intelligent, and civil fashion. This Wednesday, we will seek to practice the intellectual virtue of facing disputed questions in a panel event on the question: “Is Jonathan Haidt right about the relationship between truth and justice in the university?” Haidt is a best-selling author, a prominent public intellectual, and the founder of Heterodox Academy, whose mission is to promote open inquiry, viewpoint diversity, and constructive disagreement on college and university campuses. This Wednesday, February 13 at 4:15 p.m., come to Frey 110 to watch Haidt’s recorded presentation, listen to 5 different professors respond, and then join in the conversation about this question.

Also, please do submit your proposal in our film contest and note the information session on Tuesday the 12th about senior honors projects. Some of your fellow students will offer helpful advice about how to engage and to make the most of this educational opportunity.
