Since its start 21 years ago, the College Honors Program has sought to help students cultivate a Christian worldview. What does it mean to study Physics or Finance or Music or English or any other discipline as a Christian? These are important questions for us to ask and discuss together. This week, we have the opportunity to hear two Christian professionals talk about the intersection between their faith and work. On Tuesday, Dr. Joan Centrella will talk about the intersection of science and faith through the eyes of astronomy. On Thursday, Luke Zubrod will speak about how Christians can use financial resources and capital markets to serve their neighbors. We’re also looking forward on Wednesday evening to watching our last “film on faith” together – Hacksaw Ridge – and to enjoying food and fellowship afterward.
