This week, the School of Humanities is holding its annual symposium on the theme of the common good. Goodness is a powerful theme for Christians. We still enjoy the reverberations of God’s making and declaring the entire created order good. And we are thankful to God for his goodness to us in Christ. But the good can also be elusive. Sometimes we ask ourselves—How can we see and promote and multiply goodness in a world often plagued by selfishness and enmity? Symposium presentations and panels throughout the week will address questions like this. They will focus on many types of goods—essential goods, instrumental goods, good ideas, good policies, good actions, good relationships. If you look at the symposium schedule here, you’ll see that many CHP students are participating, as well as Profs. Weaver-Zercher, Miller, Schenk, and Davis. I hope you have opportunity to take in some of the symposium’s offerings this week and, in so doing, that you'll be helped to see and love and pursue the good.
